MARKET REPORT: U.S. Office Occupancy On the Wane

By Mark Heschmeyer

If the trend of the first two months of the year holds, U.S. office markets will see their first quarter of contraction since beginning a remarkable period of expansion during the economic recovery that followed the bursting of the Internet bubble at the start of the century. Nationally, net absorption of office space dipped into negative territory in January and February with tenants giving back about 4.5 million square feet of office space, according to an early quarterly...
